Of the OSTROGS, or HABITATIONS, of the Kamtſchadales.

UNDER the name of Oſtrog we underſtand every habitation conſiſting of one or more huts, which are all ſurrounded by an earthen wall or palliſadoe.

The huts are built in the following manner: they dig a hole in the earth about five feet deep, the breadth and length of which is proportioned to the number of people deſigned to live in it. In the middle of this hole they plant four thick wooden pillars; over theſe they lay balks, upon which they form their roof or cieling, leaving in the middle a ſquare opening which ſerves them for a window and chimney; this they cover with graſs and earth, ſo that the outward appearance is like a round hillock; but within they are of an oblong ſquare, and the fire-place is in one of the long ſides of the ſquare: between the pillars round the walls of their huts they make benches, upon which each family lies ſeparately; but on that ſide oppoſite to the fire, there are no benches, it being deſigned for their kitchen furniture, in which they dreſs their victuals for themſelves and dogs. In theſe huts where there are no benches, there are balks laid upon the floor, and covered with mats. They adorn the walls of their huts with mats made of graſs.

They enter their huts by ladders commonly placed near the fire hearth, ſo that when they are heating their huts the ſteps of the ladder become ſo hot, and the ſmoke ſo thick, as almoſt

342 to ſuffocate any one who is not inured to bear it: but the 417 natives find no difficulty in going out or in; and though they 626 can only fix their toes on the ſteps of the ladder, they mount like ſquirrels; nor do the women heſitate to go through this ſmoke with their children upon their ſhoulders; though there is another opening through which the women are allowed to paſs; but if any man ſhould pretend to do the ſame he would be 342 laughed at. The Kamtſchadales live in theſe huts all the winter, after which they go out into others which they call balagans: theſe ſerve them not only to live in during the ſummer, but alſo for magazines. They are made in the following manner: Nine pillars, about two fathom long or more, are fixed in the ground, and bound together with balks laid over them, which they cover with rods, and over all lay graſs, faſtening ſpars and a round ſharp roof at top, which they cover with bramble, and thatch with graſs. They faſten the lower ends of the ſpars to the balks with ropes and thongs, and have a door on each ſide one directly oppoſite to the other.

342 They have ſuch balagans, not only round their winter habita-
251 tions, but alſo in thoſe places where they lay up their food in ſummer; and they are certainly very convenient in this country on account of the frequent rains, which would ſurely ſpoil all their fiſh if it was not preſerved in ſuch places; beſides, when they return from fiſhing and hunting in the harveſt, they leave their dry fiſh here, 'till they can fetch it in the winter; and this without any guard only taking away the ladders. If theſe buildings were not ſo high the wild beaſts would undoubtedly plunder them; for notwithſtanding all their precaution, the bears ſometimes climb up and force their way into their magazines, eſpecially in the harveſt when the fiſh and berries begin to grow
343 ſcarce. In the ſummer, when they go a hunting, they have, beſides their balagans, huts made of graſs, in which they dreſs their
